—The tenacity with which people abide by their early faith in Ayer's Sarsaparilla can only be explained by the fact that it is the best blood medicine ever used, and is not approached in excellence by any new candidate for public favor.

—When symptoms of malaria appear in any form, take Ayer's Cure at once to prevent the development of the disease, and continue until health is restored, as it surely will be by the use of this remedy. A cure is warranted in every case.

—Mr. Thomas Fitch, he of the silver tongue, has written to the Examiner that N. W. Spaulding, late Sub-Treasurer in this city, is the "gentleman in whose truthfulness he placed the utmost reliance," who gave him the particulars of W. H. Hart's furiously fictitious ride at Missionary Ridge, and which Fitch narrated so successfully as to secure Hart's nomination for Attorney General. It is now in order for Mr. Spaulding to come forward and give his authority for the remarkable yarn. General Sherman is still in the land of the living, and it will be easy to get him to vouch for the truth of the story, if there be any truth in it.

—For County Commissioner, J. F. Tranter's name is announced for the office of County Commissioner. Mr. Tranter is an old citizen of Carson, a man of first class recommendations, for the place. A man of sound sense and business ability and with a host of warm friends who would work like beavers were his name on the ticket. The Convention will make a wise nomination if they consider his claims.

Hofer Bros.

Charley and Al Hofer will open up in a few days with a choice lot of new goods, which they have purchased in San Francisco. Their new store is at the old Platt corner, and the crowd that will make for the place on the first day will resemble a rush on the bank.

THE CROW TRIAL.

Gen. Clarke's Opening Statement.

There was a large crowd present when Gen. Clarke made his opening statement to the jury in the Crow case. He stated that he intended to prove that the defendant had been reared in this city, and that his character up to the time of the killing, had been blameless. That the deceased was a man of ferocious disposition, a broiler and fighter, with brutal and inhuman instincts, and was considered a dangerous man. That one day when the boy and Hogan were arranging for the division of some water in a stream, the boy stooped down to divide the water, when Hogan, thinking he was taking too much, aimed a blow at his head with a shovel, and the boy, raising his hand in defense, had his fingers badly cut. The boy fled, fearing his life. From that time he lived in hourly peril of his life, and not being strong in mind or body, his brooding placed his mind in such a state that his reason was dethroned. That Hogan, when in liquor, was continually asserting that he was sorry that he had not knocked the boy's brains out, and would some time do so. That on July 2nd Hogan saw Crow irrigating his land, when he leaned over the fence and said: "You red-headed son-of-a-b—, your father has been stealing my water and I'll kill you on the spot." Hearing this the boy dropped his spade and ran for his life. On July 3rd he came to town, where Hogan was about brandishing his pistol. When he met Hogan the latter glared savagely at him, and a few minutes later a citizen of this city, whom the defense will produce at the trial, heard Hogan say as he pointed out young Crow, "I will kill that d— red headed son-of-a-b— before sundown." The gentleman sought the boy on the street, took him aside, told him what the man had said, advised him to look out and told him his life was in danger. He then concluded to go home, and when at Sweeney's corner saw Hogan for the first time since he had heard of his threats to kill him. Concluding the opening statement Gen. Clarke said:

Just at that moment the boy with his mind full of fear, saw Hogan for the first time since he was warned of his danger—since he was told of the threat—since he was told that he must look out for himself—That Hogan had threatened to kill him before night. And Hogan, in that boy's disordered mind, was the greatest terror that could have been presented to him.

Now, as the boy will tell you, and I will submit him as a witness—Hogan, just at that instant—just at the instant when he saw him first, raised up, and as quickly as he could, he pulled the pistol out of his pocket and shot him and killed him.

Now, whether Hogan did raise up or not it will be for you to say. That the boy believed it will be made to know, and it will appear from the witness of the State, Mr. Mays, that just as the boy was within fifteen or sixteen feet of this man—just at that instant Mr. Mays will tell you, that Hogan, who before then was not sleeping and had not been sleeping—he will tell you, that Hogan, who up to that time sat with his face in his hands, raised up and dropped his head on his side. That much will appear from the testimony of the principal witness of the State. I call your attention to that, that your minds may be disabused of the belief that Hogan was sleeping when the fatal shot was fired.

Now, I will show you not only the general nature of the man Hogan—I will show you by a witness who picked him up that at the time he was shot that the pistol was partly out of his pocket; that the whole handle was out of his pocket—that it was so far out of his pocket that the barrel could be seen. I will show you that by a gentleman whose veracity is unquestionable an unimpeachable. I will multiply it if there is any doubt by three witnesses who were present, and one of them is Mr. R. H. Lindsay of Reno.

To confirm to you this theory of the case which I have stated I will call your attention to the situation, the killing. In this direction is the Arlington Block (pointing to the map.) A little further to the West, as exhibited upon this map, there is vacant ground and some trees West of the alley—ways, here is also one that has been closed for years. Now if the boy had been looking for Hogan, and had intended to kill him, if that had been his purpose, if he had made up his mind to do this thing he would have waylaid him between Carson and his home. But, instead of that, he hitched his horse up to these trees and came down the street in broad daylight, surrounded by men, women and children who knew him. After the deed was done he ran down in broad daylight, passing these men, through this crowd where there was a hundred men. Would he not have waylaid and assassinated the man who was the constant dread and peril to his life?

Would he have hitched his horse in this place and approached Hogan from this direction coming up through this crowd? If I show you, gentlemen of the jury, that Hogan said he would kill this boy before sundown—if I show you, as I will, that the very day before this homicide occurred, that Hogan threatened and flew at him, and threatened to kill him on sight, and that this war brought to the boy's attention, if I show you that the deceased was intimidating him, and that the boy's mind was disordered thereby, and that coming suddenly upon this man, who had threatened to kill him, and that he believed that he saw the man make a movement which impressed it upon his mind, that he was about then to put these threats into execution, you would have nothing to do then, under your oaths, as his Honor will charge you, except to say that at the time of the killing the boy had reasonable ground for believing that his life was in danger, and that he was justified under the law, not only the law of the statute book, but the law of humanity, and the law of God.

Now, this is what we rely upon in excuse or justification of the act. A number of witnesses were examined for the prosecution yesterday but the testimony is crowded out of the issue.

Lost None of His Laurels.

Hon. T. B. Riekey's withdrawal from the candidacy for Governor last Saturday was even to his confidential friends a great surprise. He had manfully won his fight, having had pledged to his support 90 out of the 144 votes in the Convention. His victory over Adams at the polls even seemed to the people an assured fact. But for ways that are dark and tricks that are vain the politician is peculiar.

Mr. Riekey had suspicions that he was a victim of political perfidy on the part of a few of his influential adherents, who could not prevent his nomination, but who might prevent his election. The unexpected candidacy of Cleveland which followed Riekey's withdrawal, gave at least a color to these suspicions. At all events for reasons which he and his friends think good Riekey rose above the nomination and declined to allow his name to go before the Convention. Notwithstanding, right after the nominations were made Mr. Riekey got out on the streets and talked for Stevenson and the Republican party. In approval of his whole course in this manly fight the boys have commenced to hurrah for Riekey for Governor in 1890. Mr. Riekey has lost none of his laurels in this fight but to-day stands politically stronger in the estimation of his fellow citizens than ever before.—Free Lance.

The Lieutenant Governor.

The contribution given to the State ticket from Humboldt county is one upon which the Republican party of Nevada has every reason to congratulate itself. The name of H. S. Davis, upon the State ticket for the office of Lieutenant Governor means a Republican victory in Humboldt county the stronghold of Democracy. Mr. Davis has been a resident of that section of the country for many years and his friends irrespective of party are best expressed by the census list. He is a young man of life, energy and ambition with a record upon which no aspersions can be cast, and is in every way qualified by business ability and experience to perform the duties of the office he will be called upon to perform after Jan. 1st 1887.

—The Enterprise congratulates the people of Nevada on the fact that they are not to see a recurrence of the Saturnalia of corruption that was seen at the first election of Mr. Fair, the most disgraceful ever known in this State, and probably the most disgraceful that was ever known on the Pacific Coast.
